TIP ON WHAT TO DO WITH COYOTES
Besides the raccoon, the coyote (Canis Latrans) is probably one of the most adapted animals. Despite passed efforts to trap and dispose of them, there are more living in southern California than ever before. Although coyotes are classified as carnivores, they are true omnivores. Their diet consists of rabbits and rodents, carrion, birds, and deer and is supplemented with berries and other plant materials. If allowed they will prey on domestic pets such as cats.

There are coyotes in my neighborhood. What should I do?

Coyotes are a part of even the most urban environments. Here are things to do that may minimize conflict:

- Keep small pets indoors
- Remove outdoor pet food
- Pick up fallen fruit
- Remove bird feeders
- Secure garbage
- Trim overgrown landscaping
- Don’t water your lawn at night
- Supervise small children at play

Never Feed Coyotes! Most conflicts occur when coyotes associate people with food. This alters their behavior and makes them more dangerous.

If you see a coyote:

- Be aggressive, yell, throw rocks, or spray a hose at the animal
- Make yourself appear large & back away slowly
- Never turn your back or run away
